★ COURSE OVERVIEW

The Protection of Personal Information Bill will soon be passed by parliament. The impact of the new law for business and government will be significant, especially for organisations dealing with personal data. Similar laws changed the business landscape in the E.U. It will oblige organisations to set up new ways of dealing with personal information. It would mean reviewing existing relationships, processes and legal contracts. New policies will have to be drafted and implemented. A new set of obligations and penalties will be placed on organisations when they deal with personal data. The task of becoming legally compliant is large and organisations and employees need to begin early. Compliance will not only prevent penalties but will also give organisations a competitive edge. To ensure your organisation is ready for the new legislation AstroTech is offering a training course on "The Protection of Personal Information in Business and Government".

The course covers the following topics:

- Protection of Personal data
- The contents and operation of the "Protection of Personal Information Bill"
- How business and government will be supervised
- How the protection of personal information will be enforced
- What the legal obligations are of organisations and their employees
- How the new law interacts with other legislation including The Consumer Protection Act and The Electronic Communications and Transactions Act
- How to deal with personal information
- The international perspective and its relation to South Africa
- The implications for data sharing and data storage
- Cross border data flows
- Approaches to compliance with the protection of personal data
